

SAINT LOUIS UNIVERSITY™

GRADUATE DISSERTATION FELLOWSHIPS 2025-2026

The Saint Louis University Dissertation Fellowship seeks to encourage a new generation of scholars to undertake innovative and extensive research. Dissertation Fellowships are competitively awarded to Saint Louis University Ph.D. candidates whose work during their time at Saint Louis University demonstrates outstanding academic achievement and whose dissertation will significantly extend the body of knowledge within their discipline. Students may receive the fellowship once during their program after they have advanced to candidacy. A maximum of two applicants from each graduate program can apply. Departments can determine how they will choose which applicants to put forward if more than two students are interested in applying.

Award

Each eleven-month fellowship award carries a monthly stipend, up to 12 hours of tuition scholarship (depending on the number of hours needed to graduate), and health insurance. Students must be enrolled as a full-time student for the award period. To be classified as a full-time student during the dissertation stage, a student needs to be enrolled in at least 1 hour until completing 12 hours and then may enroll in zero hours. The start and end dates of the eleven-month fellowship typically correspond with the University's fiscal year (July 1 to May 31). No other fellowship, traineeship, assistantship, or similar appointment may be held concurrently. Students may apply who have other funding pending; however, if both are awarded, students must choose only one source of funding. Students may defer funding for 1 year if they can still complete the fellowship within the maximum time frame allowed for the program.

Eligibility

Applicants for the eleven-month awards must have passed their oral exams and advanced to candidacy before the application deadline. Students receiving this award must complete the fellowship before reaching the end of the maximum number of years (five) for funding in a Doctoral program or six in programs that permit six years of funding. Students must be nominated by the department and only two students may be nominated by each graduate program.

Criteria

Applicants must demonstrate outstanding academic achievement and a proposed dissertation that will significantly extend the body of knowledge within their discipline. This will be determined from the student's application letter and a letter of support from their mentor.

Responsibilities

Fellows are expected to submit a summary of their research to the Office of Graduate Education at the completion of the fellowship for inclusion in publications and symposia highlighting scholarship at Saint Louis University. Mentors are expected to monitor deadlines and support the fellow's progress. The student is required to file a progress report by February 28. In addition, Dissertation Fellows must also attend the Graduate Education Department's New Fellowship Orientation at the beginning of the Fall semester in the month of August.
